Everyone is busy working and searching the web for important resources – everyone except me. Instead of writing emails or taking care of administrative tasks, I am completely off the Internet and focused 100% on brainstorming new projects. It is liberating and absolutely joyful. Despite all the time I spend online, (it adds up to more than I will admit) I am constantly reminded of all the precious time some online tools save me every day. They reduce the time I spend on things like convincing myself to train, search for important information and drill down my place. Not only do I spend less time doing the menial and brain-less tasks we all hate, but I'm re-applying that time to more fun pursuits - like coming up with new ways to grow my business or brainstorming new book ideas. Both web and mobile apps have been incredibly useful in these three areas. Let me share my favorites in the hope that you can free up some of your time and mind space, too. Hacking Willpower1. Freedom – The ultimate tool to disconnect (for Mac). There's something with willpower that sometimes we just can't beat. In times like this, apps like Freedom help you disconnect completely from the web, so you can double down on your job. I use this app when I really need to get offline things done in peace. 2. SelfControl - This app is just like Freedom, except limited to a list of websites you want to block (also for Mac). I use this to block social networking sites (and especially Quora!) when I really need to get work done. This means I can still use the web to find important information, but I'm blocked from the sites that steal my time.3. Batch Reply for Gmail - Many tools will help you manage emails, but this free tool is awesome for handling bulk amounts of emails Just choose which emails you want to reply to, and write your answer to them all at once. Many emails processed at once - - (This version is for Chrome.) 4. FancyHands - The one tool that makes virtual assistants easy to understand and hassle-free. This US-based service makes reminders harder to ignore. For example, are you having a hard time calling your grandmother? Easy - have an assistant at FancyHands send you every Thursday with a reminder to give her a call, along with a picture of you two at Christmas. Try deleting this email.5. Gratitude Journal - This iPhone app (and many others that are just like it) focuses on reminding you to write down what you're grateful for. The best? It will give you a pop-up reminder to write down your daily list. I love not having to worry about remembering this. When the app asks, I enter my list.6. Google Calendar – It's harder to get to the gym than you think. In my experience, it's even harder when you have to figure out what day to go. We spend so much mental power negotiating with ourselves over Today or tomorrow? Today is busy, I just want to see it tomorrow instead, right? Instead of emptying batteries on these decisions and evaluations, skip it by putting training on your calendar at the beginning of each week. Try setting up repeated training appointments for an even easier setup. (I train four times a week at 6:30. If the calendar says so, I will. No mental force required.) 7. GymPact – If exercising in your calendar doesn't work out, try betting on it. This site allows you to bet your exercise habits against a friend's. You will both deposit money into an account and you will be refunded part of the pool every time you work. Using money to hack willpower has helped many gym-goers over the years. I dare you try it. Download Memory8. Evernote - One of the best tools for storing data. Evernote is also a great place to capture creativity on the go. Whether you're on the treadmill, at a meeting, or just in a hurry, use Evernote on your phone to make sure you're listing down which idea or new thought crossed your mind. Take the stress of trying to remember it later! 9. Dropbox – Now most people who read this article or have heard about Dropbox. There are plenty of ways to use Dropbox, but downloading the memory is a great way to start. My favorite way to do this is to use the iPhone app or web app (when I'm on other computers) to find important information from my computer. Why save things in my mind when it's on every technical device I have?10. Google Drive – The new Google Docs are useful for collaboration, but also for keeping old projects archived when you don't want them in your face. Also super ultra searchable. I recently found a free template to keep a cash flow calendar - absolute gold and completely free.11. Brewster - This amazing iPhone app is one of the few that replaces a native iOS app for me. What it does is gather all your contacts into location – albeit from your phone, from Facebook, Twitter, LinkedIn and more. The best? It reminds you of who you don't have with in a while! Thank you, Brewster, for downloading my networking capabilities.12. Pocket - Time is hard to come by, but amazing content is not. Everywhere I look, there's great content out online. Pocket allows me to save it for reading or viewing later when I have a little more time. One click and I no longer have to worry about remembering the link I saw on the blog that once ... 13. Instapaper - What I love most about Instapaper is not just the fact that you can save links to save later. What I love most is the fact that it allows you to strip down every screen to an ad-free reading experience. Nothing to focus on than text—talk about a rest.14. Dropbox again – This time, for phone photos. Dropbox on your computer now lets you create a folder for photos that are automatically updated every time you connect your phone to your computer's USB drive. No thinking, just saving memories - amazing. Automate tasks15. TeuxDeux - A no-frills app that will help you keep track of places. My favorite thing about this program is that if you don't get anything done today, it will automatically just slide over until tomorrow. 16. Things - A super simple but super strong do-app. With Things, I set up a lot of recurring reminders and tasks –mostly, so I never have to worry about keeping track of what to do when. Things remind me of paying rent, paying employees, cropping my customer list, checking up on Google Analytics, and much more.17. Manilla - Imagine being notified when your bills are due. No more noting what days to pay electricity and what days to pay cable. Manilla will handle it for you, and let you know if you're about to be late.18. Meeteor – Network requires a lot of work, and I love Meeteor to automate the introduction process every single day. Every day I log in, Meeteor matches me with relevant contacts who are willing to connect. Network without problems - awesome.19. FancyHands again - This time, to outsource important tasks. If you don't have time to book a hotel or find a restaurant, let FancyHands take care of it for you. This also works to do research, if it's not really your favorite activity.20. Asana - This amazing tool for managing team tasks will help you spend less time managing and more time getting things done. It is also free for smaller layers, and the interface is beautiful.21. Trello – For the more visual people out there, Trello lets you move task cards around from list to list. It helps me view all my projects and tasks on one dashboard according to their status. It also helps me visualize my cash flow! Recommend this free tool.20. IfThisThenThat - The best way to automate everyday and detailed tasks that don't add much value. Why spend time saving or keeping track of your photos Instagram or Foursquare? Let IFTTT take care of it for you and automatically save all your photos to a Dropbox folder. How about checking the weather? It's an annoying search every so be notified if it is going to rain in your area, or if it will cold / hot, etc. Put your recipes and forget about the rest. Zapier - This is just like IFTTT, but more oriented towards business users. There are very powerful recipes that PayPal sales alerts, create tasks in Trello, move users around Aweber, and more. Check it out to automate your business.22. Buffer – Social profile management can be difficult to remember. The buffer is especially powerful if you sync it with IFTTT, by the way. My favorite recipe sends my Google Reader starry posts to Buffer for my Twitter followers to read. It's even better to share articles, and it's even better to automate the actual sharing section.23. Dragon Dictate - Sometimes there is no time to sit down and write. Talking is just so much faster. With this app, you can talk into your phone and use it to write long documents or even email. Imagine how quickly you can get things done if you don't need to print it? Genius.24. UsingMiles - This amazing site allows you to manage your entire database on prices and miles in one dashboard. You can also search for flights with the very miles! I don't know about you, but if there's an app that can help me remember what I've earned and where, I'm down to use it - especially if it helps me travel for free!25. F.lux - Interference with computer brightness is annoying, but necessary. We spend a lot of time staring at the screen, and this program focuses on making sure the brightness is at the best possible brightness for your eyes to feel amazing longer. Don't you love it when apps automate making your life better? (I do.) I hope this list helps you get your willpower, tasks and memory all right using the latest technology. These are the tools I use to keep brain power free of everyday and more focused on what really matters to me and my business. With it taken care of... what do you want to spend your extra time on? (Photo credit: Robotic Arms Building Finished via Shutterstock) Shutterstock)
